Both properties are favorite destinations among Duke students, staff, alumni and regional travelers seeking unparalleled Southern hospitality, incredible pre- and post-game cuisine and luxury accommodations in the heart of campus.

"Coach K is retiring after a historic career, and we are all feeling a sense of excitement and anticipation as we prepare for the start of basketball season this year," said Randy Kolls, Area General Manager and Partner for the trio of properties owned by Duke University. "Most fans and alumni haven't been inside Cameron Indoor Stadium for nearly two years, making this chapter in college basketball history even more meaningful. We look forward to welcoming Duke fans from across the country to the heart of campus for an unforgettable homecoming."

With basketball tickets in short supply this season, many Blue Devil fans will join in the excitement on campus by catching a game at the Inn's lively Bull Durham Bar.
